THE REBEL RAIDERS .- Nothing positive i known as to the whereabouts of Wheeler-Despatches received at headquarters in Nashville Sunday night state that he had probably escaped across the Tennessee river near Florerce, Alabema. A later despatch says a por- is continually exensing itself is its own ion of Roddy's command is supposed to be jet on this side of the river. Nothing is known as to the reported crossing of a portion of Forcest's forces at Oliffon. The report is probably without foundation. Nothing has been heard of Williams and Dibrell since Saturday. One handred and forty-two prisoners, captured from Whoeler's forces near Marfreesboro and Woodbury on the 6th Instant, were brought to Neshville on Monday.

A Columbia despetch says the read has been repailed so that the ears cau run from Hautsville to that place. Trains are making regular trips on the Nashville and Chattinooga Reilread.

WHAT IS IT?-The Wheeling Intall gence says: Saturday last, what was supposed to be a dressed deer arrived from Oakland at the house of List, Mcrison, & Co, per express. It w s sperended in front of the house and attracted great attention trom its singular formation. One gentleman who bus seen a greet deal of this fort of game effered to bet two hundred and fifty dollars that it was not a dear. A patcher who was present took ale but and put up all the money he had into the hande of a third party. During the d y nearly all the surchers in the city, and every con who l'as had any ex crience as a hunter was called in to see the "what is it," but the e inion were so conflicting that the set could not be decided, and the man who ship ed i. was telegraphed to send the affidavit of the hunter who killed it, and the certificate of the shipter.

A REBEL GENERAL CASHIERED FOR COW-ARDICE .- A gentleman, recently from Texas, and now in New Orleans, states that the rabel General Hamilton Privlean Bee, a native of South Carclina, has been esshiered for cowardice in the face of the enemy. General Bee, it appears, had been appointed to command the division formerly led by General Tom Orten, of Texas, who was killed on Red river, and wes charged with abandoning Lis comma d in a subsequent fight with General

S cele, in Alkanses. According to official records we find that England's icon-one d vessels of wer already affect, and all of which have been recently built, amount to 19 chips, of from 4 to 41 gu s cacb, and monating in the aggregate 400 guns, of a tonnage of 71 958, and 14,762 home power. With patient eyes fixed on the door, She waited, hoping over,
I'll death's dark well rose cold between
Her gaze and yon firever,
She heardyour codsteps in the breeze,
And in the wild-bees himming;
The last breath that she shaped to words
Said selfty, "Is be coming?"

Now silenced lies the gentlest heart
That ever beat 'neish eover;
Safe-never to be wring sgain
By you, a fields liver!
Your wrong to her knew never end
Till earth's last h inds were riven;
Your unemory rose cold believen
iter parling soul and heavon. Now valn your false end tardy griof, Valn your remorseful weeping;
For she, whom only von docelved,
Line hashed is dreamless sleeping.
Go-not beside that peaceful form
Should lying words be spoken!
Go, pray to God, "Be merciful
As she whose heert I've broken!"

TRUE TO THE LAST. It happened just before I went up for my examination (said old Smith). The firm was then Sharpus, Ward, Andrews, & Co.; and if anybody had told me that my name would ever figure in it as a partner, I should have looked up the law relative to the confinement of lunaties, by way of practice and for that person's special benefit. Well, the hones is Ward, Smith, & Diggles now, and it may be Smith, Diggles, & Smith before very long, if Master Jack there minds his I's and Qs, and chooses to work his way on, as his father did before him. But to go on with my story. I was just ont of my articles; and as Mr. Wardle-Crab Wardle, we mischievous young mon-law clerk, was ill, poor old Mr. Andrews (who undertook that branch of the business) asked me to remain and do his work while he was away. And glad enough I was of ths chance; for, in the fir-t place, it gave me an ircrense of salary, which was an important consideration in those days, and better still, i stood in even grenter need. I dou't mind owning it now, because I've too good an opinion of Jack's common sense to think that it will have a bad eff ct on him; but when I was his age I thought, like many another foolish young fellow, that I was so wonde fully elever, that I should take to law as n duck takes to swimming, without the trouble of learning. An old school ellow and great chum of mire w sone Charl y Lawrince, and his society and exem le were anything hat conducive to application. He had £500 a year of his own, and was wniting for a commission in the army. Nearly every shilling of my fortupe, past, present, and to come, had been sut k in paying the premium and stamp on my articles with Sharpus, Ward, that the communicaship of a day y ings aberegiment, and ordered off to India, i found myself in difficulties, under which I ground for many a year. On but he was a rightdown good hear'ed boy w s Churley; and if I had hinted at my troubles to him, they would very soon have vanished. But I was too proud for that; n: d Charley had troubles of his own at starting, wrich prevented his thinking about There was a girl down in D vonsiire, where his family lived-a clergyman's daughter-with whom he had fall n in love, and would have married straight off, but her father, a proud unn and devoted wors' ipper of mau-mon (out of the pulpit), had other views for the conveyancer's draft?" Now this was mere clirk's work, and I offered to do it myself; but he was always considerate of other's trouble, and insisted upon helping. So be look the draught and read it, whils I followed bim in the purchanent to see that it was properly copied. It was a marriage-settlement, whereby Lord Thornbury, a nobleman of seventy years of n.e. and any thing but reputable character settled £63,000 upon his tride-elect, and this lidy was no other then Laura Tregarven! "Por Charley!' thought I, as I walked home, "how am I to break to you this rupture of all your hopes?" And my difficulty was not lessened letter from him, stating that his regiment was ordered home, and bidding me wish him joy upon his prospect of again beholding his dir-

ling constnut Loura.
Well, six months passed, and I heard no mors of Charley; nor, indee, hal I much tim to think about bim, for poor o'l Wardle's illness ended in lis death, and I was appointed, provisionally, managing clerk in his stead. The assizes were on, and we had several heavy cases for trial in different parts of the country. On one of these, the great cau o of Stoppette agt. Moss, was entered for trail at York; and arm. agt. the prosecution. I pricked up my cars, and hegan to list n to the case. It appeared that a day or two before the burglary, Lord Thornbury and returned with his bride from their continental tour, and had taken up his nbodo at his country-seat; that, in anticipation of the festivities which were to follow, the wholo of his grand faully plate and her ladyship's jewels had been brought down from his Lendon handers; that one after that the season of the festivities which were to follow, the wholo of his grand faully plate and her ladyship's jewels had been brought ("And what I suspoet." "And what I suspoet." down from his London bankers; that one of the prisoners was a discarded servant, who knew where those valuables were kept; that the honse had been broken into, and the whole of the silver swept away; and that another of the secused was caught in the act of climbing down from the roof of an outboase close to the place where an entranco had been effected. The ease against this fellow (who was indicted by the name of Richard Thompson) seemed to be clear enough; that against his companions rested upon circumstantial evidence. One of them, named Aruold, had been seen in comglary, prowling about the park, close to the house, in a suspicious manner; and the land-lord of the inn at which Thompson hal been staying swamp to the landstaying sworo that a man-whom ho afterward recognized as Arnold—called for the prisoner Thompson the following night, and that they walked out together in the direction of Lord Thornbury's park. The name of the discarded servant was O'Hara, and he had been cealed under some ashes in the back-kitchen, was found a mass of silver plate broken up and partially melted, but not sufficiently so to obliterate the marks whereby is was indicted also; but he plent of was a Lord Thornbury's property. If he had accompanied him to the Hall and assisted in the burglary, how came it that he (the prisener Arneld) had not also been taken? As for O'Harn, he, poor innocent, was the victim of the old Jew "fence." No one lind een him bring the stolen plate to Sheffield. Some one clse in ght have taken it to the Jew's house, and there was nothing to show that O Hara knew the had character of that mansion into which-so nveigled; and so forth and so on, but the jury were not to be humbugged; and aft ca short discussion found Arnold and O'Hara gnilty.
